Iusticier : m. A Justice, or Justicier ; a Gentleman that hath (as almost every Gentleman of meanes in France hath) High, Meane, or Low Jurisdiction, within a certain Precinct ; or within his owne (or another mans) Territories : All Justiciers (though otherwise there be oddes enough in their Priviledges) must keep Clerkes ; and Seales for Sentences, but not for Contrasts, if they have not Droict de Tabellionné, ou Notariat (which onely some few high Justiciers have ;) They may also have to the number of six Sergeants, and Goalers for the keeping of their prisons.

Le bas Justicier ; ou, le Seigneur bas Justicier. One that hath base Jurisdiction (within a certaine Precinct) over his owne, or another mans, tenants ; takes notice of real, or personal Actions not exceeding the value of 60 s. or wherein a greater amercement, or fine then 7 s. 6 d. Tour. lies not ; with trespasses a few Customes (as the reformed ones of Paris, and Meleun) allow him to deale, so they deserve not a greater fine then that ; but the most restraine him to personal matters, and those especially that concerne his owne rights ; (with which onely the Bas Justiciers of old time used to meddle ; howsoever, their Judges not content withall, have in proceffe of time incroached on causes bred in villages between party and party, touching seizures, boundaries, delivery of possession, harme done by trespassing beasts, and other slight and petty differences, that require a speedy, and locall decision ; for all which they are to keep but foure Courts in a yeare ;) Criminal persons taken in the manner he must apprehend, and may keep them in his prison four and twenty hours, but not longer, nor can he proceed further against them : Upon every Confiscation, Escheat, or Bien vacant that falls within his Liberty he may take 7 s. 6 d. Tour. but they are so few, and that so little, as many Justiciers neglect it.

Le haut Justicier ; ou, le Seigneur haut Justicier. A Lord of high Jurisdiction ; judges, and determines all civile and and criminall causes (except, as in la haute Iustice) happening within his Liberty, or Precinct; To which end he keeps a Judge, or Garde de Iustice, at this time styled higher (son Bailly, & Lieutenant,) who must be learned, and a Graduate (for a Judge that is no Graduate is not, in France, held worthy to pronounce the sentence of death in an ordinary Iustification:) And because of his owne businesse determinable (if they concerne the rights of his Iustification, or Seigneurie) in his owne Court, he also keeps a Procureur fiscal, by the name, and mouth of whom he pleads, even as the King doth in higher Courts by his. He may hunt freely in fit seasons, over all the uninclosed grounds of his Liberties: He may fine his (offending) vassalls at his pleasure; and once in his time cause them all sweare, to acknowledge no other Iustification then his; to preserve, by all possible means, the privileges thereof; and to inform him of any that shall offer to intrench upon them: he levies to his own use all fines and confiscations (except for high treason) all Escheats (except bastards, and strangers goods) and all Biens Vacans (except some kind of wrecks) accruing within his Precincts: In Normandy he cannot keep malefactors in his prison above 24. hours; after which (if he have not the whitest condemned them) he must send them unto the next Supreme Lord; In other Provinces he may keep them longer, and every where punish, according to the customes of the country, all sorts of them (even to Sorcerers, Blasphemers, and Idolaters;) Only he refers over to the Kings officers, and Courts, all such as commit, or be charged with, high treason.

Le moyen Iusticier. The Lord of mean, or middle Iustification; takes notice of all civill causes as well as the Haut Iusticier (except in the ordering of the separation of goods between married folkes; the interdiction of unthrists; & les Decrets; wherein he comes as far short of him, as he goes beyond the Bas Iusticier en le scellé, confession d'inventaire, emancipation, dation de tuteurs & curateurs, wherewith the Bas Iusticier is not to deale:) But what criminall causes he may take notice of is not agreed on by the customes of France; for some of them, as those of Paris, Nivernois, and others, assigne him none but such as are not finable above 60 s. (the utmost he can impose in any cause;) Others give him power over Batteries, Bloudships, and sleight felonies; Others over Manslaughters, and capitall felonies: But others (the merest unto the Common Law of France) permit him to judge no offenders but such as are to escape with life, and lim; And therefore his Iudge needs not to be a Graduate: Nor hath he (as the Haut Iusticier) a Procureur fiscal (though he have an Officer of almost the same nature, tearmed Procureur d'Office) because he hath no signe, but only an allowance of 60 s. Tour, out of everie Confiscation, Escheat, or Bien vacant, that is levied, or gotten, in his Precinct.
